	Institute for Deaf. Types of deafness and the causes were outlined as follows: Conductive hearing loss is the result of sounds not being able to pass freely to the inner ear. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • This usually results from a blockage in the outer or middle ear, such as a build-up of excess ear wax or fluid from an ear infection (especially common in children). • It can also happen as a result of some abnormality in the structure of the outer ear, ear canal or middle ear – or be due to a ruptured eardrum. • A condition known as otosclerosis (which results in the abnormal growth of bone in the middle ear) can cause severe conductive hearing loss. The excess bone prevents the ossicles in the middle ear from moving freely. • The result of this type of hearing loss is that sounds become quieter, although not usually distorted. Depending on its cause, a conductive hearing loss can either be temporary or permanent. Conductive hearing losses can often be corrected with medical management, or minor surgery. The presentation ended with information on hearing aid support, medical research, accessing solutions, accessing products such as amplified phones, the importance of fundraising and a pointer as to how people can access help. On concluding the presentation the Chair thanked Roger on behalf of the Forum. ACTION: Circulate the presentation to colleagues,	VQ
